Re: use of pharmaceuticals to force court compliance

Dear Lord Bates,

Mr. Stephen Clarke of Leixlip, Co. Kildare, Ireland is into the 11th week of his incarceration at the Mater Infirmorum psychiatric unit in Belfast where he is being force medicated for demonstrating against wi-fi in the classroom. It is relevant to his situation that Dr. Magda Havas, Associate Professor of Environmental & Resource Studies at Trent University warned the people of his village several years ago about the dangers associated with microwave radiation. This warning was followed by visit to Leixlip by Prof. Olle Johansson of the Karolinska Institute, Stockholm whose forty years of research has consistently found damage to human cells from exposure to microwave radiation from cell phones.

This is the same technology which Mr. Clarke objects to in the classroom. Attached please find a list of materials which substantiate Mr. Clarke's claims.

In the U.K. use of pharmaceuticals for psychiatric treatment is called a "chemical cosh" - in other words, use of a blunt instrument to force compliance. This particularly Orwellian matter has been of concern for the British Home Office for some time.

The referral of Mr. Clarke's objections and refusal by the court in Northern Ireland to address his concerns as well as barring him from seeing his children for two years and requiring psychiatric assessment and treatment is a violation of his Constitutional and Human Rights.

He is scheduled for evaluation by a three-man panel on 16 September. Please review his case and correct the wrongs done to him before then.

Sincerely yours,

John Weigel
